When the rage clears I can see what I've done. Fine tremors make my fingers shake. My mouth is dry. She lies still on the bed but she's breathing. My own breath is held and then released. I go somewhere else during those times, when I come back to myself I'm sorry. She's hurt but she'll be fine. I lean over to her and she flinches away. I'm sorry for that, too. This isn't how I wanted it to be. I whisper in her ear that I'm sorry. I can see by her wide eyes that she doesn't believe me.
